Questions and Answers

Anna Meyerhoff-Cole: How are these rates compared to the last contract?

Lee Barrier: There was a slight increase. I want to say about 3% maybe, just really slight.

Tania Cole: I don't know. I'm just curious as I'm reading through this description if someone can just explain each description? Some of it is a little bit self explanatory but I don't understand what SCRAM Touch Point is or Victim Notification. Could someone explain that?

Tom Struble: SCRAM is just a brand of monitoring. It's the company that produces the equipment. But as you look at like TAM that's Transdermal Alcohol Monitoring. So that's just a bracelet that's on the ankle that continuously monitors their clients intake of alcohol through perspiration of their skin. Touch Point is basically a cellular service. If you notice only one (1) vendor offers that and it wasn't necessarily something that was requested in the RFP. They just put it in there because it's something they offer. It's basically just the ability to monitor a client through their cell phone. It does digital recognition of the client. They can check in and check out. We don't necessarily use that but they just put it in there I suppose as an option if we would like to use it. Then I believe the last one was a Victim Notification. Once again, that was only offered by Greenfeather, I believe, and that is the ability for if a judge would like to they can give the victim of a crime the ability to be notified if that bracelet that the client is wearing comes in the area of them. They don't necessarily know where the perpetrator is but they know that they might be a good idea to exit that area. It's not used very often but it is a really good option if the judge chose to put the client on that.

Anna Meyerhoff-Cole: So SCRAM is the manufacturer so we went out looking specifically for SCRAM devices?

Tom Struble: No. SCRAM is just the manufacturer that Greenfeather uses. I think one of the other vendors perhaps uses SCRAM too. So some of the vendors have their own equipment. They are the actual manufacturers of the equipment and then they also utilize the equipment. Greenfeather just has a contract to use SCRAM bracelets, SCRAM equipment.
